Developer Growth in the Southwest

In the gentle hum of everyday life across Southwest Nigeria, where the rustle of cassava leaves meets the rhythm of ambition, a quiet disruption is unfolding, developers are rising. They are not always seen in the spotlight, but they are there, in campus dorms lit by candlelight, in co-working spaces with inconsistent Wi-Fi, in WhatsApp groups that never sleep. Their stories matter.

In Kwara, growth whispers rather than shouts. Though many developers have paused, the ones who remain are resilient like dry-season farmers, building even when the tools are scarce.

Projects like Blockpool, Luxela, Herwaree, and Solnest are inching forward one test at a time. And through SolLearn, a mentorship program blooms with Fabian from FiatRouter.

Haleem, the DevRel, dreams not just in code but in infrastructure ,calling for a build station where light and Wi-Fi aren't luxuries but necessities. It is a vision rooted in community and growth.

Ekiti answers with quiet strength. An increase of 3 new developers brings the total to about 10 active builders, with over 20 in the wider guild. Names like Oxfave, Emaz, Xela, and Devcreed are forging paths that others will follow. In Q1, three groundbreaking products were launched. Highlights include EventSnap's innovative on-chain photo-sharing platform and Reward Dev, which rewards developers with both points and purpose. A week long workshop also provided the ideal setting for fresh ideas to take root and grow.

And then there is Lagos. Ah, Lagos the lion's den and the poet's dream. It holds 159 members in its main guild, and 64 more in its annex. Here, the air tastes of potential and ambition.

From Nexcrow, nurtured by a $30,000 Solana grant, to Ribh Finance and Paj Cash, whose names ripple through the community like electricity through wires . Lagos builds with fire. And in the shadows rise the next: Use Terminal, CloutChain, SupplyVest , projects yet unshaped, but pulsing with promise.

THE END

In the heart of Southwest Nigeria, each line of code and every shared idea is a testament to our collective resolve. Though challenges persist and the journey is not without its pauses, every project, every workshop, every spark of innovation lights the way toward a brighter tomorrow. Our developers whether in Kwara, Ekiti, Ondo, or the ever-pulsating streets of Lagos continue to build not merely technology, but a future rich with promise and shared purpose.

As we close this chapter, we remain steadfast in our belief: that together, we are building tomorrow, today.
